FOREWORD

IMC has taken upon itself the task of being a bridge between Regulators and market participants. At IMC through Seminars and Workshop we discuss various changes in regulatory framework. One such Seminar was organized on the changes in the Consent Term Regulations framework. Since introduction in 2007 Consent Terms framework had gained considerable momentum until 2012. In 2012 pursuant to various suggestions and criticisms some amendments were made in the regulations. Unfortunately these amendments have reduced considerably the use of this mechanism for disposal of alleged defaults.

The wisdom of SEBI panel has been substituted with mandatory eliminations of certain types of defaults. The list of defaults shows that cases that fall under the Code of Conduct of particular regulations are also rejected. For example a person may not have indulged in Insider Trading but failed to report under Code of Conduct would also be denied the use of Consent Mechanism. This will lead to substantial increase in legal disputes to an otherwise delayed legal system.

Through this paper we attempt to present a study of the consent mechanism as it operated pre May, 2012 and its effectiveness. We have also taken the liberty of preparing a draft of the proposed Consent Regulation which we think would be a great contribution to settlement of non habitual defaults in securities markets. This will also free the Securities Markets from an otherwise delayed legal system of the country.

We wish to put on record our gratitude to Mr. Somasekhar Sr. Partner, J Sagar Associates, Mr. Sandeep Parekh, Founder, Finsec Law Advisors and Mr. M. S. Sahoo, Advocate, who were panellist in our seminar at IMC. The issues discussed in the seminar have been presented in the paper.

RESEARCH PAPER ON CONSENT SETTLEMENT FRAMEWORK REVIEW AND RECOMMENDATION

I. Settlement of Enforcement Actions

In the past, Indian laws and authorities used to be quite cagey about disposal of enforcement actions by amicable settlement. However, keeping in view the hard realities, the laws as well as the authorities now use three forms of amicable settlement, namely, plea bargaining, consent settlement and compounding, for a large variety of enforcement actions with view to deliver justice better. The Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, for example, provides for settlement of most kinds of criminal offences which attract imprisonment up to seven years. In advanced jurisdictions, the bulk of civil enforcement actions are settled amicably.

The advantages of this kind of settlement are many in Indian context. It frees up the scarce resources of the authorities and the judicial system which are already saddled with a very large number of enforcement actions awaiting disposal for years. It allows the authorities to have innovative deterrents on the delinquents while achieving equitable remedies for the victims. It is more effective because the settlement orders are passed only after compliance with the terms of settlement. Most importantly, it achieves something in days or months, which decades of trial and appeals may fail to, and avoids the risk of the delinquent being scot free after prolonged, expensive and valiant legal battle just because of lack of the required level of evidence. In short, it achieves the public good that there be an end of litigation, Expedit reipublicae ut sit finis litium.

The consent settlement is an alternative to disposal on merits, where the track record is not much to speak about: the conviction rate is hardly 10%; most convictions don't invite a imprisonment, many invite a penalty of ₹5,000, the disposal takes years and even decades, and the victims are not indemnified. The consent settlement avoids all these and often achieves outcomes superior to that is possible through disposal on merits. The stark contrast in disposal of Satyam misdemeanour in India vis-a-vis in the US is testimony to the efficacy of amicable settlement. Another testimony is disposal of the enforcement action relating to Reliance Communications Limited for the misdemeanour that occurred in 2007-09 through consent settlement in early 2011 resulting in debarment from secondary market for one year, rotation of statutory auditors, and upfront payment of ₹50 crore. Contrast this to the fact that a few enforcement actions relating to misdemeanour that happened in the last century, as evident from the agenda for the Board meeting on July 28, 2011, were waiting for disposal on merits as on March 31, 2011.

The securities laws generally provide that no appeal shall lie to the Securities Appellate Tribunal from an order made by SEBI or one of its Adjudication Officers, with the consent of the parties. These also provide for compounding of offences. In exercise of these powers and in recognition of the efficacy of amicable settlement, SEBI issued, vide circular dated April 20, 2007, guidelines for settlement of enforcement actions. Based on the experience gained in implementation of the guidelines over the last five years, it has modified the same vide circular dated May 25, 2012.

II. Working of the Consent Settlement Framework

By the end of March 2012, SEBI has approved 1186 applications settling various kinds of enforcement actions. These included 75 consent applications where consent orders were passed by the Securities Appellate Tribunal (SAT) and the Supreme Court. These also included 70 compounding applications where the compounding orders were passed by the respective criminal courts. These further included 142 applications where the terms of settlement included debarment from dealing in securities market / suspension of certificate of registration for different periods. During this period, SEBI declined to settle the enforcement actions in respect of 817 consent applications and 26 compounding applications on the ground that the terms of settlement proposed by the applicants were not commensurate. The details of disposal of consent and compounding applications till March 31, 2012 are as under:

Particulars	Consent	Compounding	Total
No. of applications received by SEBI	2558	165	2723
No. of applications disposed by settlement	1116	70	1186
No. of applications rejected	817	26	843
No. of applications withdrawn / infructuous	327	1	328
No. of applications pending	298	68	366
Amount of Disgorgement (₹ lakh)	2897.38	0	2897.38

Consent Settlement Framework

At the end of March, 2012, a total sum of ₹207 crore was realized from such settlement. This amount comprised of ₹29 crore towards disgorgement and ₹176 crore towards settlement/compounding charges. The disgorgement amount is distributed, wherever possible, among the investors who have suffered loss on account of the related misdemeanour. The settlement charges and undistributed disgorgement money, if any, is remitted to Consolidated Fund of India. During April 1 - December 20, 2012, SEBI has approved 38 consent applications realising ₹7 crore towards settlement charges and ₹2 crore towards disgorgement.

The working of consent mechanism under the April 2007 circular was being criticised, among others, on the following grounds, which have been addressed by the circular in May 2012:

- a. The mechanism was being misused by a few to prolong the enforcement proceeding indefinitely by making repeated applications offering marginally better terms of settlement.
- b. Quite a few used to continue to commit the same kind of defaults which they had settled a few times earlier under consent.
- c. The order settling an enforcement action through consent was too brief to impart transparency.
- d. The processing of applications was not transparent.
- e. There were no time limits either for the delinquent to seek consent settlement or for SEBI to dispose of the consent applications.

The consent mechanism was also being criticised on the ground that there was no uniformity in the terms of settlement for similar enforcement actions. The circular of May, 2012 has attempted to address this concern, though it is not possible to do so. No two cases are the same, similar or identical. Two apparently identical proceedings may have different mitigating factors which could lead to different terms of settlement. If these two identical cases were adjudicated on merits, these would in all probability lead to two different outcomes, as trials of two cases of murder do not result in exactly the same punishment. That is the reason why the law usually provides an upper ceiling on punishment for any offence and allows the judge to determine the exact quantum of punishment based on application of mind to the unique facts of the case. Different terms of settlement for two apparently identical proceedings should not, therefore, be viewed unusual, though care has to be taken to ensure that similar cases end up in similar outcomes.

There were also a few other concerns. These are based on inadequate understanding of the facts and issues and did not require to be addressed. Some of these are:

- a. It is believed in some circles that SEBI enriches itself by appropriating the settlement charges received under the consent procedure. As stated earlier, the settlement charges received through consent settlement is remitted to the Consolidated Fund of India and does not come to the kitty of SEBI, as is the case with any penalty imposed by any Court in India.
- b. It is believed in some circles that a person can violate any provision of the securities laws and settle the violation, if at all caught, through the consent procedure. The statistics, however, do not support this. Consent settlement is not a matter of right. The three layers in SEBI have to be satisfied that the settlement terms are appropriate to the alleged violation. In fact, they were not satisfied in case of 843 applications, as stated earlier. Settlement proposed in about 42% of the applications has not been accepted by SEBI.
- c. It is alleged in some quarters that that any violation can be settled on payment of money. It may be noted that the enforcement actions are not settled on monetary terms only. In appropriate cases, the terms of settlement are in kind in the sense that these include debarment from trading or accessing securities market, disgorgement, suspension of certificate of registration, etc. For example, the consent settlement in 142 orders debarred 188 persons from dealing in securities market for different periods. About 12% of the applications have been settled on terms which included non-monetary terms. A potential violator of law, therefore, cannot take a chance that his violation would be settled by SEBI through the consent procedure and that too, at best, on payment of money.
- d. Some have expressed a concern that while SEBI refused to settle a few matters on consent, but disposed of the same subsequently on merits without any finding of the guilt on the part of the delinquent or any penalty. It is worth noting that the standards applied for disposal under the consent procedure and disposal on merits are different. It is possible that a delinquent may wish to settle a matter, which does not - have adequate evidence, to buy peace, but the same matter, if tried on merits, would naturally find no guilt on his part.

- e. A concern is expressed that SEBI settles most of enforcement actions under the consent procedure and hardly any on merits. Fortunately, the data are contrary to this. For example, SEBI settled enforcement actions against 326 persons in while it disposed of enforcement actions against 2010 persons on merits during the same year.
 - f. A concern is expressed that consent settlement does not have any finding of guilt on the part of the delinquent. It may be noted that the consent settlement does not either have a finding that the delinquent is not guilty. The terms of settlement are different depending on if a delinquent admit or denies guilt.
 - g. It is alleged at times that the consent terms are not commensurate to the violations committed by the party. It needs to be noted that the consent process passes through application of mind at three levels, namely, Internal Committee, HPAC and the Panel of WTMs. Any application for consent is discussed at length at all the three levels, including the HPAC which is an external body headed by a retired Justice of a High Court. This would produce more commensurate outcomes than that is possible under disposal on merits.
 - h. It is believed that disposal of enforcement through the consent procedure does not achieve justice. This is far from the truth. The same outcomes, as would have been obtained if the proceedings were adjudicated on merits, are being achieved through the consent settlement. At times, the consent settlement achieves more than the adjudication on merits simply because the terms of settlement could be more innovative. They are more effective because these orders are passed only after compliance with the terms of settlement. The disposal of proceedings on merits directs the party to pay the penalty which may not be realised always. SEBI has recovered about ₹220 crore during last five years through the consent settlement. In contrast, it has realised a cumulative amount of ₹25 crore towards monetary penalty through adjudication on merits during the last decade.
 - i. There is an apprehension that the consent settlement framework is not supported by law. As stated earlier, the law clearly allows SEBI to settle matters through the consent procedure. This procedure has been blessed by SAT, the Supreme Court and other Courts who pass appropriate orders on submission of consent terms agreed to between SEBI and the delinquent concerned.

III. Difficulties in the Extant Framework

The modified framework brought in by the circular of May, 2012 has made the consent framework impractical. These are:

- a. The earlier framework allowed settlement of all kinds of defaults as long as the terms of settlement were appropriate. The new framework debars settlement of serious FUTP defaults, the ICDR defaults which materially affect the rights of investors, the MF defaults which have resulted in substantial loss to the unit holders, etc. The words 'serious', 'materially', 'substantial', etc., being subjective, legitimatises discretion of SEBI. The HPAC / Panel of WTMs have, however, been granted discretion to settle any default irrespective of its kind and gravity. Thus, the new framework practically allows settlement of all kinds of defaults as the earlier framework, but requires invocation of discretion. Interestingly, SEBI will use discretion initially to deny consent settlement in serious cases, while the HPAC/Panel of WTMs will use discretion subsequently to allow consent in those very cases and vice versa. The delinquent would have no clue as to whether a particular default is consentable, and whether a particular default is consentable would be contestable.
- b. There is no reason to prohibit certain kinds of defaults from consent settlement. Ideally, any default, irrespective of its nature and gravity, should be settled through consent, subject, however, to the condition that the settlement terms are appropriate to the alleged default, that is, at least the same or equivalent outcomes, as would have been obtained if the proceedings were adjudicated on merits, are achieved. For example, if a default warrants a penalty of ₹1 lakh on adjudication, it should be settled under consent only if the delinquent either admits the guilt and pays ₹1 lakh, or does not admit or deny the guilt and pays ₹2 lakh. If terms are not appropriate, the consent application should be rejected as has been happening in about 42% of the cases. While the authorities should have no discretion as to which defaults can be settled under consent, they should have full discretion to determine the terms of settlement keeping in view all the relevant factors.

Consent Settlement Framework

- c. The new framework prescribes a formula to arrive at the terms of settlement. This robs the consent mechanism of its soul. A formula, howsoever robust and comprehensive, can't capture all possible factors having a bearing on the terms of settlement. For example, it can't capture the strength of evidence and consequently the probability of conviction. Take the case of a default which warrants a consent settlement of ₹1 crore as per the formula. If, however, the evidence available is such that the probability of conviction is 0.1, the delinquent would never settle the default for ₹1 crore. It may not mind to settle it for ₹10 lakh if the strength of evidence is factored in. This explains why a few defaults were not settled earlier under consent even though the delinquent offered handsome amount, but it was completely exonerated subsequently on adjudication on merits. Its unintended consequence is that only the defaults with substantial evidence would be settled under consent while the defaults with inadequate evidence would be adjudicated on merits.
- d. Formula driven approach delivers if the settlement is in monetary terms only. However, the framework rightly allows, wherever necessary, suitable directives under the consent order. These directives such as cancellation of registration, debarment from market, compensation to investors, disgorgement of unlawful gains, etc. could often be more effective and equitable. But since it would be difficult to establish equivalence between monetary terms and such non-monetary directives, the new framework would encourage settlement of defaults mostly in monetary terms which may not always fully achieve the objectives of enforcement actions.
- e. A formula has laudable objectives to ensure that the consent terms are commensurate to the default and uniform for similar defaults. However, since it can't factor in all possible factors, it would occasionally over-estimate the terms of settlement and deny settlement in an otherwise deserving case and vice versa. If no formula is used in adjudication where there is application of mind by one person only, it is not necessary to use a formula in consent settlement which passes through three committees and application of mind by nine senior, experienced and responsible persons, including a justice and two whole time members.

Keeping in view the experience gained in implementation of the consent guidelines of 2007 and subsequent modification in May 2012 and various concerned expressed and with a view to increase the effectiveness of the consent settlement, the consent framework:

- a. may be provided under the regulations to be made under the securities laws to lend statutory sanctity and have the explicit blessings of the SEBI Board and the Parliament;
- b. should provide a detailed, transparent procedure from receipt of the consent application till the issue of order disposing of the consent application;
- c. must ensure confidentiality of the submissions made by the delinquent during the consent process, but disclose the outcomes in detail;
- d. must institutionalise the Internal Committee, the High Powered Advisory Committee and the Panel of Whole Time Members and their roles in the consent process;
- e. must allow settlement of all kinds of enforcement actions, without any exception, under the securities laws provided the terms are commensurate;
- f. encourage innovative, effective and non-monetary terms of settlement, preferably the terms which are equitable to victims of the related misdemeanour;
- g. must specify the factors to be taken into account to determine the terms of settlement; and
- h. must dispose of the consent application within a time bound manner and hasten the disposal of the enforcement actions on merits if the consent procedure has failed.

A draft of the Consent Regulations which will fulfil the above requirements is enclosed in following pages
